9. Read the following passage and answer the question given below.

How would you use a radio or a telephone if you had no electricity or batteries? These problems bothered British Inventor Trevor Baylis. So in 1996 he invented the windup radio. It doesn't need electricity or batteries. You wind it up with hand. It plays for about an hour. Then, you wind it up again. Today it is manufactured in South Africa.

Then in 1999, Baylis invented a mobile telephone which is powered by shoes. The shoes contain a small battery that is powered when you walk. This battery is connected to the mobile phone. These two simple inventions can bring modern communications to all parts of the world.

Baylis doesn't have a university degree in engineering. In fact he left high school before graduating. He just loves making things to help people. He never knows when ideas will come to him. He got the idea for the radio while watching TV. The idea for the telephone came to him in a dream.
